Re: 300A-CV-71072, 11/25/2005

On October 15, 2005, NSM members attempted to march in a north Toledo neighborhood. Before the march began, local residents and counter-protestors began throwing rocks at the police and damaging property. Toledo Police called off the march when it became apparent that the crowd was out of control. NSM members left the area, but the crowd of counter-protestors continued to grow. In the ensuing riots, several businesses were looted and a bar was burned. Approximately 115 arrests were made by local, county, and state law enforcement officers.

NSM received national media attention subsequent to the riots and has claimed increased fund raising and support. As a result, the NSM has planned the December 10, 2005, rally. The 12/10/2005 Toledo, OH rally has been organized by [redacted] NSM member and proprietor of the white supremacist web site [redacted] has claimed, "the city of Toledo deliberately allowed blacks to riot because the City government was afraid of appearing politically incorrect, and it was this refusal by the police department to act, and not the numbers or the force of the initial rioters, that led to the North Toledo confrontation." [redacted] will invite NSM members from around the country to this rally.

According to Toledo Police, who have met with NSM members to discuss the venue of the rally, it was determined that the 12/10/2005 rally will take place on the steps of One Government Center, a state owned building located at 640 Jackson Street, Toledo, Ohio. One Government Center houses state, county, and local government offices including the office of the mayor. NSM has gone through the Attorney General of Ohio's office to use the site for the rally. As a result, the Ohio State Highway Patrol will be the lead law enforcement agency within the fenced area where the NSM is to conduct the rally. To gain access to the fenced area, individuals will be screened by police officers and required to pass through metal detectors. The Toledo Police Department is to be the lead law enforcement agency outside of the fenced area. Cleveland Division will assist both agencies by providing intelligence and investigative assets as needed. The command post will be located at the Toledo Police Department Headquarters located at 525 N. Erie, Toledo, Ohio, which is located across the street from One Government Center. The on-scene commander will be [redacted] Toledo Police Department.

Several hundred law enforcement officers from the Toledo Police Department, Lucas County Sheriff's Department, and Ohio State Highway Patrol will be deployed at the event. Several agents from Cleveland Division, Toledo Resident Agency, will also be deployed at the event.

Title: National Socialist Movement Rally;
Orlando, Florida;
2/25/2006
CT Preparedness- Special Events

Synopsis: The purpose of this EC is to provide an operational summary of events related to above-captioned matter.

Details: On February 25, 2006, the National Socialist Movement (NSM) held a rally and march in Orlando, Florida. This event was preceded by two highly volatile and violent NSM rallies in Toledo, Ohio in late 2005, which resulted in a combined total of approximately 200 arrests. Due to the high threat and likelihood for violence at the Orlando event, the assistance of the FBI was directly requested by the lead agency, the Orlando Police Department (OPD). Other participating agencies included the US Marshall's Service (USMS), Orange County SO, Osceola County SO, and the Florida Department of Law Enforcement (FDLE). Approximately 30 NSM members marched in this rally, and were counter-protested by approximately 400 individuals. Twenty-three arrests were made at this event for a variety of offenses, ranging from battery on a law enforcement officer through disorderly conduct.

Following the violence in Toledo, NSM garnered extensive national media coverage. This has prompted a general spike of interest in NSM among white power advocates, specifically in the southeast US. Further, NSM has grasped upon the concept of lawful protests as a viable means to capture the national spotlight, especially given the potential for agitated and violent counter-protests. Therefore, it is possible that NSM will attempt to organize similar marches/rallies in other cities.

The intent of this summary is to provide guidance for other field offices/resident agencies whose assistance may be requested by local/state law enforcement for an NSM event.

NSM members researched the permit process for Orlando approximately six weeks prior to the event. They also actively pursued and obtained media attention six weeks prior to the event. NSM utilized the internet to advertise the event and to agitate counter-protest groups. From the start, NSM made extensive efforts to rile up opposition groups and individuals, specifically with an intent to incite violence.

The primary organizer for NSM was [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] the event. OPD initially requested that NSM protestors should be prepared to be searched and photographed, go through a metal detector, and have their vehicles searched. The intent of this was to prevent NSM members from bringing weapons or explosives to the event. [REDACTED] an injunction against the city of Orlando regarding these rules, and was eventually given reduced rules. NSM was required to assemble in a separate parking and staging area, but was not subject to search.

Of note for offices which may have future NSM rallies, consideration should be given to having NSM members assemble at a state or government facility, such as a police barracks or headquarters. This would force NSM members to consent to searches of both persons and vehicles, and ensure a safer environment for law enforcement and the general public.

From the onset of this process, [REDACTED] was viciously confrontational with OPD. He provided media interviews and internet coverage of the on-going issue related to the rules for the protestors. [REDACTED] was fairly knowledgeable of the law, particularly regarding lawful assembly and protests, and was very eager for confrontation. He also sought the names of individual OPD officers, to include in legal proceedings as well as internet postings.

b7C

[REDACTED] utilized the internet to research and identify individual counter-protestors prior to the rally. He then shared this information with other NSM members and sympathizers. Further, [REDACTED] directly contacted several of these counter-protestors through both the internet and telephone to antagonize them regarding the event.

b6

NSM planned to march a 1 mile route through a predominantly black neighborhood in Orlando. Their route passed by the NAACP headquarters, a mosque, a center for Islamic-American relations, a homeless shelter, a black law school, a state forensic laboratory, and the federal courthouse. In an effort to control the potentially violent response in the area, OPD and city officials met with community leaders and known activists to discuss the upcoming protest. A project named "BE COOL" was initiated by community leaders, to encourage non-violent, peaceful counter-protest. T-shirts and other clothing were designed by these community leaders for the counter-demonstrators to wear. This effort was very effective in controlling potential violence in the area, and helped curb minority public opinion that police in the area were in anyway "supporting" or "protecting" NSM.

Initial planning by the city of Orlando had considered limiting NSM to a static protest rather than a march. However, the one mile march did prove to be somewhat beneficial to law enforcement, as it wore out some of the protestors and counter-protestors. NSM did conclude its rally with speeches at the federal courthouse. For this event, OPD was able to shut down roads around the building to establish natural barriers between NSM and the counter-protestors. These roads were reinforced with barricades and riot control units, which adequately maintained security for all involved.

The city of Orlando was able to enact a specific ordinance banning masks at this particular protest. This was an extremely effective tool in identifying and removing the violent anarchist counter-protesters from the crowd before they could get fully organized.

A significant problem for crowd control was the dilemma of infiltration of the different groups. At least one racist skinhead infiltrated the counter-protest group and initiated a fistfight with a counter-protestor. Both individuals were subsequently arrested. In addition, NSM was infiltrated by a local news reporter, who one week later published his story and photographs in a local independent newspaper. OPD had previously encouraged NSM to verify all of their marchers, but NSM clearly did not have an organized plan for this.

Another effective tool for crowd control was the use of multiple helicopters during the protest. This provided a dual benefit of crowd over-watch, as well as maintaining a heavy volume of noise during the march to drown out verbal agitation between the two groups.

Several NSM members wore concealed body armor on the day of the protest.

To: All Field Offices From: Tampa
Re: 300A-TP-68696, 03/08/2006

De-confliction among law enforcement agencies was generally smooth. Federal, state, and local agencies had adequate time to coordinate both operational and intelligence matters, and information sharing between intelligence entities went well. ATF-Orlando presented a potential officer safety issue, as they refused to attend any operational or intelligence planning meetings, but did send three armed special agents to the protest in an undercover capacity without notice to OPD. OPD command staff addressed the issue with ATF-Orlando management.

The Anti-Defamation League (ADL), Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC), and possibly other civilian "watchdog" groups were in contact with local enforcement regarding this event. It is likely that these groups also sent protestors to the event in an "undercover" capacity. As always, significant caution should be exercised with these organizations, as they are not sanctioned law enforcement entities.

In conclusion, FBI-Orlando assesses that NSM will possibly attempt to organize similar rallies in the future. Further, while exercising their constitutional rights at these protests, NSM and its leaders will likely take extensive steps to agitate as much violence as possible from counter-protest elements.

Violence at Ohio Neo-Nazi March

Saturday, October 15, 2005

Associated Press

TOLEDO, Ohio — A crowd protesting a white supremacists' march Saturday turned violent, throwing baseball-sized rocks at police, vandalizing vehicles and stores, and setting fire to a neighborhood bar, authorities said.

When Mayor Jack Ford (search) and a local minister tried to calm the rioting, they were cursed for allowing the march, and Ford said a masked gang member threatened to shoot him.

At least 65 people were arrested and several police officers were injured before calm was restored about four hours later.

Ford blamed the rioting on gangs taking advantage of a volatile situation. He declared a state of emergency, set an 8 p.m. curfew through the weekend, and asked the Highway Patrol for help.

"It's exactly what they wanted," Ford said of the group that planned the march, which was canceled because of the rioting.

At least two dozen members of the National Socialist Movement (search), which calls itself "America's Nazi Party," had gathered at a city park to march under police protection. Organizers said they were demonstrating against black gangs they said were harassing white residents.

The violence broke out about one-quarter of a mile away along the planned march route shortly before it was to begin. One group of men pounded on a convenience store, and others overturned vehicles. There was a report of a shooting but police hadn't found a victim, Police Chief Mike Navarre said.

About 150 police officers chased bands of young men through the area. Officers wearing gas masks fired tear gas canisters and flash-bang devices designed to stun suspects, but the groups continued throwing rocks and bottles. Several officers and firefighters suffered minor injuries, Navarre said. At one point, the crowd reached 600 people, officials said.

Finally, police marched shoulder-to-shoulder down the street shouting to people to stay inside, and the crowd of several hundred broke up.

At least 65 people were arrested on charges including assault, vandalism, failure to obey police and failure to disperse, Navarre said. He said the white supremacists had left hours earlier.

"We frankly could have made a couple hundred arrests easily," Navarre said. "We just didn't have the resources on hand to arrest all of them."

The mayor had appealed to residents the night before to ignore the march. He said the city wouldn't give the Nazi (search) group a permit to march in the streets but couldn't stop them from walking on the sidewalks.

When the rioting began, Ford tried to negotiate with those involved, but "they weren't interested in that." He said people in the crowd swore at him and wanted to know why he was protecting the Nazis.

They were mostly "gang members who had real or imagined grievances and took it as an opportunity to speak in their own way," Ford said.

"I was chagrined that there were obvious mothers and children in the crowd with them," he said.

300A-SE-92275

Thomas Frisch, 76, said a large group of men destroyed the exterior of a gas station next to his home of 30 years.

"A whole big gang started to come in here. Next thing you know, they're jumping on the car. Then they overturned it. Then they started on the building, breaking windows, ripping the bars off," he said.

Louis Ratajski, 86, and his nephew, Terry Rybczynski, left Jim & Lou's Bar as a crowd gathered in front pelting police with rocks and breaking the windows. They climbed down a fire escape from the apartment where Ratajski lived over the bar and only later saw the fire on television.

"I was shaking. I feared for my life." Rybczynski said.

Keith White, a black resident, criticized city officials for allowing the march in the first place.

"They let them come here and expect this riot to happen?" said White, 29.

A spokesman for the National Socialist Movement blamed police for losing control of the situation.

Neo-Nazi March Causes Riots

Sunday, October 16, 2005

Associated Press

TOLEDO, Ohio — Police began receiving word midweek that gangs were going to descend on a neighborhood where a riot erupted over a planned march by a white supremacist group, but the resulting disturbance was worse than expected, the police chief said Sunday.

The riot broke out Saturday when protesters confronted members of the National Socialist Movement (search) who had gathered at a city park. Rioters threw baseball-sized rocks at police, vandalized vehicles and stores, and set fire to a neighborhood bar, authorities said. More than 100 people were arrested and one officer was seriously injured.

Officers who work in the area reported that gang members were planning to turn out in force, and authorities made plans to handle any disturbances, Police Chief Mike Navarre (search) said at a news conference Sunday morning.

"We knew during the preparation that it was going to be a tremendous challenge," Navarre said. "Anyone who would accuse us of being underprepared I would take exception with that."

However, he added the protest lasted longer and was more intense than expected.

About two dozen members of the supremacist group, which calls itself "America's Nazi Party," had gathered at a city park just before noon Saturday to march under police protection. The march was called off after rioting started.

Authorities want to determine why protesters turned their anger toward police after the Nazi group left, Lucas County Sheriff James Telb (search) said. Officers wearing gas masks fired tear gas canisters and flash-bang devices designed to stun suspects, only to see the groups reform and resume throwing rocks.

People were "highly angry over the idea that someone from outside the community could come in and insult them" in their neighborhood, Mayor Jack Ford (search) said.

Twelve officers were injured, including an officer riding in her cruiser who suffered a concussion when a brick came through a side window and hit her in the head, Lt. Ron Pfeifer said Sunday.

A state of emergency remained in effect through the weekend. About 200 officers patrolled the neighborhood overnight, Navarre said, and police reported no problems. Another overnight curfew was to be in effect starting at 8 p.m. Sunday.

City officials stressed the disturbances were confined to a 1-square-mile area. Police arrested 114 people on charges including assault, vandalism, failure to obey police, failure to disperse and overnight curfew violations.

The neighborhood northwest of downtown, full of tree-lined streets and well-kept brick homes, once was a thriving Polish community. But within the last decade it's become home to poorer residents.

A spokesman for the National Socialist Movement blamed police for losing control of the situation.

The neo-Nazi group became interested in the neighborhood because of a white resident's complaints to police about gang violence, Bill White, a group spokesman, said earlier this month.

WilliAnn Moore, president of the Toledo NAACP (search) chapter, had said she worried the march would exacerbate an already tense situation, and urged black youths to ignore the demonstrators. Local leaders were taking steps "so this doesn't turn into some kind of race war," she said.

Only a few people were out Sunday morning raking leaves, walking dogs in a park or going to church.

"This never should have happened," 80-year-old Ed Kusina, who has lived in the neighborhood nearly all his life, said Sunday. "They should have never let them march here."

Rioters set fire to 86-year-old Louis Ratajski's neighborhood pub, Jim & Lou's Bar, but he and his nephew, Terry Rybczynski, escaped the flames.

"I was shaking. I feared for my life," said Rybczynski said.

Keith White criticized city officials for allowing the march: "They let them come here and expect this not to happen?" said White, 29.

Neo-Nazis Rally in Ohio

Saturday, December 10, 2005

Associated Press

TOLEDO, Ohio — Members of a neo-Nazi group staged a rally at City Hall on Saturday, two months after plans for an earlier march set off a four-hour riot in which a mob attacked businesses and police.

Hundreds of officers stood guard to make sure there was no repeat of the October melee as about 60 white supremacists shouted at counterdemonstrators and held placards, including one reading: "White race, stand up and take back your neighborhood."

Nearly 200 others showed up in the freezing weather to protest against the members of the National Socialist Movement.

The counterdemonstrators, chanting slogans and carrying signs reading "Go home Nazis" and "Stop the hate now," were kept behind barricades about 75 yards from the area where the neo-Nazis were cordoned off.

After speaking for an hour, the neo-Nazis left in a caravan of cars, escorted by several police cruisers. Authorities reported only minor arrests and no violence.

In October, the neo-Nazis gathered for a march they said was intended to protest gangs and rising crime in a Toledo neighborhood. That plan set off a riot in which businesses were burned and looted and bricks were thrown at police.

On Saturday, Police Chief Mike Navarre said about 700 officers from across northern Ohio were stationed through the downtown area. He said gang leaders and community activists had offered assurances that counterdemonstrations would be peaceful as long as the neo-Nazis were kept out of predominantly black neighborhoods — a key factor in October's disturbance.

Police made 29 arrests, all for misdemeanor offenses that included disorderly conduct, inciting violence and carrying a concealed weapon. There were no injuries or property damage, Navarre said.

The cost of policing the small rally was expected to reach $300,000 for the city alone, not counting the cost for state troopers and sheriff's deputies.

A judge granted the city's request Friday to block the neo-Nazi group and counterdemonstrators from rallying beyond the grounds of the downtown government building. That kept the group about two miles from the neighborhood where the rioting broke out in October. Twelve officers were injured and 114 people had been arrested after the earlier rally.

Violence Erupts at Neo-Nazi Rally in Florida

Saturday, February 25, 2006

Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — Violence broke out and police made a handful of arrests at a neo-Nazi rally Saturday before a planned march through a predominantly black neighborhood.

Police hauled away at least five people in handcuffs after a fistfight broke out between supporters of the National Socialist Movement and counter-demonstrators who were voicing their displeasure with the group's anti-minority message.

It was not immediately clear to which groups those arrested belonged.

More than 300 law enforcement officers were on the scene. Some officers patrolled with K-9 units and on horses, while police helicopters circled above the march route.

In October, the same neo-Nazi group gathered in Toledo, Ohio, for a march they said was intended to protest gangs and rising crime. The situation turned into a riot in which businesses were burned and looted and bricks were thrown at police.

Further, in October of 2005, members and associates of captioned group conducted a rally in the Woodrow Wilson Park and surrounding neighborhoods in Toledo, Ohio. NSM members intended to march through the neighborhood streets following their rally in the park in order to protest recent black on white violence and narcotics trafficking.

Before the NSM could begin their march, local residents and counter-demonstrators began throwing rocks and bricks at vehicles, local residences and businesses. Toledo police responded by firing tear gas into the gathered counter-demonstrators and local residents. Toledo police advised the NSM to leave the area for their own protection and the NSM complied. Local residents and counter-demonstrators continued with the clash with the police, looting a store and setting fire to a local bar. This rally and riot, and the attendant media coverage for the NSM, was deemed a great success by the majority of the white supremacy movement. NSM reported increased fund raising and increased applications for membership immediately following these events.

Thereafter, in November 2005, an additional rally was organized in Kingston, New York by white supremacist internet radio talk show host [REDACTED] organized this rally to protest recent assaults which occurred in the area of the Kingston High School. FBI, Albany initiated a 300A (Counterterrorism Preparedness - Special Events) investigation for the Kingston NSM rally. Based on the coordinated effort on behalf of the JTTF with the state and local law enforcement, the rally was held without incident.

b7c

On February 25, 2006, approximately 30 members and associates of the NSM held a rally and march in the predominantly minority Parramore neighborhood of Orlando, Florida. This rally was organized by NSM Orlando member [REDACTED] to protest "black crime" in the Orlando area.

More than 300 federal, state and local law enforcement officers conducted event security, keeping the NSM members separated from crowds of over 500 counter-protestors and neighborhood residents. During the rally, 17 counter-protestors were arrested by local authorities for charges ranging from wearing a mask in public to assault on a law enforcement officer. None of the National Socialist Movement (NSM) members were arrested.

FBI investigation has determined that the NSM plans to conduct additional marches in selected cities throughout the United States. The intention of these rallies is three-fold: to incite racial unrest in minority neighborhoods; to drain law enforcement resources due to the security needs of these marches; and, to increase their recruitment of new members. The NSM is hoping to repeat the results of their Toledo, Ohio march which fomented a riot by minorities angered by the NSM's presence in their neighborhood.

Consistent with the above, recipients are to be aware of the following meetings/rallies that are being prepared by the NSM:

03/25/2006 - NSM is planning a statewide meeting in Michigan (no further details);

04/22/2006 - NSM is planning a Pro-White Rally in Lansing, Michigan. According to the NSM web page the two hour rally will begin at 1400 hours and will be "in the spirit" of national rallies held at the Valley Forge, Pennsylvania, National Military Park in September 2004 and the Yorktown, Virginia, National Military Park in June 2005. It was noted by the NSM this rally will be held in conjunction with the groups annual national organizational meeting as well as the annual celebration on 04/20/2006 of Adolph Hitler's birthday. Sources have reported the NSM expects upwards of 300 people to attend this event;

07/02/2006 - 07/04/2006 - NSM Rally/Camp Out in Washington State; unconfirmed information has been received that the group plans to rally at the Washington State Capital; and, it should be noted the NSM web site indicates the group is planning a large "historical event" that is tentatively being planned for late summer in conjunction with the Keystone State Skinheads.

FBI human intelligence source information as well as public source information has clearly identified predicated subjects of domestic terrorism investigations will be in attendance at the aforementioned events.

Detroit and Seattle are to determine if the NSM have applied for any permits for the aforementioned events. Detroit and Seattle are to offer any and all assistance of the FBI to improve law enforcement response and intelligence sharing in a concerted effort to prevent any potential acts of terrorism or criminal activity which arise during these events.

Detroit and Seattle should also contact the Special Events Management Unit at FBIHQ to explore the possibility of designating these activities as a Special Event.

Receiving offices should forward positive intelligence from sources with knowledge of planned activity by individuals, domestic or international groups under [redacted] as well as intelligence from any sources or [redacted] as well as intelligence from any sources indicative of unlawful activity or other acts of violence, to the [redacted] as well as to the Minneapolis, Detroit, Seattle and Kansas City Divisions

Further, receiving offices are to advise the [redacted] FBI Minneapolis, Seattle and Detroit as to if any sources will be in attendance at the NSM events. Recipients are to provide either a positive or negative response as to the attendance of sources at the NSM events.

Protesters, neo-Nazis meet again

State Patrol breaks up rally early on steps of Capitol

By Venice Buhain

The Olympian

OLYMPIA — In their second rally in the capital city this year, members of a fledgling Northwest neo-Nazi group again were vastly outnumbered by counter-protesters Sunday.

□ Between 100 and 150 anti-Nazi activists confronted about 10 members of the National Socialist Movement on the steps of the Capitol around 1 p.m.

But Justin Boyer, leader of the Northwest chapter that plans a larger rally at the Capitol in July, said he was pleased with the turnout — particularly the Seattle television station that taped the rally at the Capitol and a protest at Heritage Park.

"We draw off from the media attention," Boyer said. "There was a TV station — that's a better victory than anything."

No arrests

No one was arrested or injured, and no physical contact was reported Sunday, according to Washington State Patrol Sgt. John Sager, but troopers in riot gear dissolved the rally after about a half-hour because the tone of the verbal confrontations became violent.

As the protesters chanted "Not in our town, not in any town," troopers escorted the neo-Nazis off the Capitol Campus and asked them to leave.

Peter Bohmer of Olympia Movement for Justice & Peace said the counter-protesters were organized and ready with their own message against hatred.

"We want to challenge their message," he said.

The National Socialist Movement informed police of its plans to rally in Sylvester Park and then of a move to Heritage Park, but the group instead went to the steps of the Capitol without informing police, Sager said.

Many of the protesters arrived at the Capitol from a rally organized by Unity in the Community at nearby Heritage Park, which featured speeches by South Sound activists Anna Schlecht, Cindy Corrie and others.

That rally, which started around noon, was organized in response to the Northwest National Socialist Movement's plan to demonstrate in Olympia. Other protesters patrolled Olympia and relayed the neo-Nazi group's whereabouts via cell phones. Some at the Heritage Park event opted not to join the protesters confronting the National Socialist Movement on the steps of the Capitol.

'Out of hand'

After the groups at the Capitol had faced off for 30 minutes, troopers from the Civil Disturbance Action Team arrived and escorted the neo-Nazis away, Sager said.

"It started to get out of hand," Sager said. "Both groups were starting to get violent. There was no physical contact, but a lot of verbal confrontations."

Sager said the troopers in the civil disturbance team were deployed after the two groups would not move away from one another.

"The first priority is to protect life. We protect everybody, and we don't take sides," he said.

Marcus Fabregas of Lacey said it made him angry that neo-Nazis keep coming to Olympia. He said he learned about the victims of Nazi atrocities as he grew up on a U.S. military base in Germany.

"That's not right," he said. "So I came to pay my respects and have (the neo-Nazis) get the hell home."

Boyer said Sunday the group was demonstrating in part in memory of Rachel Corrie, the Olympia activist who died after a bulldozer operated by the Israeli military ran over her as she tried to block it from knocking down a Palestinian doctor's home in Gaza. The driver of the bulldozer was absolved of wrongdoing.

The Northwest National Socialist Movement's Web site states that Corrie "took a stand against Zionist terror, and we admire her activism."

"She was a woman who was killed by a Jewish man who was not found guilty — or even investigated — after he ran over her twice," Boyer said Sunday. "The Jewish guy said he didn't see her, but if a lady with a bullhorn is right in front of you, you don't run over her."

But Corrie's mother, Cindy Corrie, told the crowd at Heritage Park that her daughter would have been emphatically against this neo-Nazi group's causes.

Cindy Corrie said her relatives include Jewish, Hindu and Sikh members, and her family has hosted foreign exchange students from Brazil.

After reading from Rachel Corrie's letters from Gaza, Cindy Corrie said her daughter had been aware and was concerned about "Nazis who want to use Israel's policies to justify their hate."

"The message of the NSM is the opposite of all Rachel stood for," she said.

Three months ago, the Northwest National Socialist Movement rallied in a parking lot in Olympia and also was greeted by a quickly organized group of counter-protesters.

The neo-Nazi group plans to return to the Capitol steps for a rally July 3, Boyer said. It is inviting other groups with similar ideologies, he said.

No confirmation

Its Web site also had listed an April 20 rally in Olympia on the date of Adolf Hitler's birthday, but Boyer would not confirm that date and the date had been removed from the front page.

Leaders on both sides said they hoped to avoid violence.

But Boyer, who said the group's First Amendment Rights were violated when the rally was broken up Sunday, said he questioned whether the State Patrol will be adequate protection for its July 3 rally.

"If today got out of control, how are they going to control July 3, or is my group going to have to control (the crowd)?" he asked.

Bohmer of Olympia Movement for Justice & Peace said local activists hope to organize a peaceful cultural festival to counter the rally on that day.

"If the Nazis do come, it will be cultural resistance to them," he said.

deny citizenship to Jews, non-whites, and homosexuals. The group is composed of mostly young males, including racist skinheads. Openly worshipful of Hitler, the NSM is one of the more explicitly neo-Nazi groups in the United States.

The NSM has previously held rallies throughout the United States. Several of these rallies in 2005 and 2006 have resulted in riots, numerous arrests and property damage. On October 15, 2005, a riot broke out when counter-protestors confronted the NSM who had gathered at a city park in Toledo, Ohio. Rioters threw baseball-sized rocks at police, vandalized vehicles and stores, and set fire to a neighborhood bar. Approximately twelve officers were injured and 114 people were arrested.

On February 25, 2006, violence broke out between supporters of the NSM and counter-demonstrators in Orlando, Florida. Police made a handful of arrests during the NSM rally before a planned march through a predominantly black neighborhood. More than 300 law enforcement officers were on the scene. Some officers patrolled with K-9 units and on horses, while police helicopters circled above the march route.

It appears a pressing concern with NSM is not the violence the group may commit, but violence it may provoke in counter-demonstrators. NSM declares itself opposed to violence and has been careful not to break laws. However, previous rallies which have resulted in violence, have provided the NSM with extensive national media coverage. It seems the NSM has grasped upon the concept of lawful protests, as a viable means to capture the national spotlight, especially given the potential for agitated and violent counter-protests. The NSM attempts to provide outrage, which may rile a crowd of opponents to commit a crime.

Throughout the last 12 months NSM units have been organized in Seattle, the Tri-Cities, and Mukilteo, Washington. During the last few months, [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] has organized rallies in Olympia, Seattle, Des Moines and Everett, Washington. Intelligence has shown the NSM Washington Unit to be relatively small in number. However, while the NSM membership remains small, previous NSM rallies have shown to produce hundreds of counter-protestors who attend the NSM rallies and combat relatively few NSM members.

Re: 300A-SE-92275, 03/28/2006

Intelligence gathered to date shows several community groups making preparations, holding meetings, and recruiting participants to counter-protest NSM at the July rally. Law enforcement estimates one thousand or more counter-protesters may be present during the July rally.

Observations made of NSM and counter-protester websites, chat-rooms and related internet blogs have shown increasing debate between these groups. These debates are often heated and include violent threats made toward each group and law enforcement. Law enforcement is often the target of violent threats, as each group views law enforcement as taking sides or participating in a particular group's philosophy. The FBI and joint law enforcement agencies believe the NSM is purposefully inciting these debates and threats, to force counter-protestors into violent actions during the July rally.

The NSM has secured a permit to rally at the Washington State Capitol Campus, Olympia, Washington, on July 3, 2006. The permit estimates attendance to be 100 plus. The NSM is also organizing a campsite for the three days surrounding the rally. The NSM has a list of hotels and a map of Olympia, Washington, on their site www.nukeisreal.com. The NSM has put out a national call to all NSM and white supremacists to rally in Olympia, Washington, in July. A flyer produced by the NSM reads:

"HEY WHITEY: Are you tired of your government openly encouraging in the name of diversity the death of the white race? Do something about it! Patriots Against White Genocide Rally, July 2-4, Olympia, Washington. The National Socialist Movement has secured legal permits to rally at the Washington State Capital. All White Racialists are invited."

The FBI Seattle Division is currently working with the Tacoma Police Department, Pierce County Sheriffs Department, Olympia Police Department, and the Washington State Patrol to gather intelligence and coordinate police activity during the rally.

Neo-Nazi rally draws 75 backers, 500 protesters

April 24, 2006

BY TIM MARTIN

LANSING, Mich. — A group of white supremacists demonstrating outside Michigan's Capitol was far outnumbered by 500 protesters who were screened by metal detectors and kept separate by 6-foot-high chain-link fences.

About 75 people from the Minneapolis-based National Socialist Movement were met with taunts from hundreds of protesters in what police described as a generally orderly event.

State and city police reported 16 arrests, mostly for disorderly conduct and other misdemeanors. Two people were taken to a hospital for minor injuries and a third was treated at the scene after scuffles between the two groups, police said.

About 500 law enforcement officers — some in helicopters and on horseback — kept the peace.

"I don't think it's OK to preach hate," said Laura Harms of Lansing, who carried a pink sign that read "People Power."

When protesters shouted at the neo-Nazis, group leader Jeff Schoep replied, "I will not be shouted down. ... You will not stop us. You will not silence us."

Group leaders said they picked Lansing as a rally site in part because of Michigan's sluggish economy and white supremacists' growing frustration

Hier: NSM Rally in Olympia, Washington on July 3, 2006
Bezug: Ohne

Our office is sharing the following information that we received from the FBI Office in Seattle, Washington. It is provided for your benefit. Please advise us if your agency develops any information that you believe may be of assistance.

Various sources indicate that on Monday, July 3, 2006, between 2:00 p.m. and 4:00 p.m., at the Washington State Capitol Campus, Olympia, Washington, the National Socialist Movement (NSM) will be conducting a national rally. It is anticipated the NSM will be led by [REDACTED] b6 b7c

The NSM is the second largest neo-Nazi group in the country, trailing only the National Alliance. The NSM adheres to an ideology of hate and call for a "greater America" that would deny citizenship to Jews, non-whites, and homosexuals. The group is composed of mostly young males, including racist skinheads. Openly worshipful of Hitler, the NSM is one of the more explicitly neo-Nazi groups in the United States.

The NSM has previously held rallies throughout the United States. Several of these rallies in 2005 and 2006 have resulted in riots, numerous arrests and property damage. Much of the violence involved counter-protesters.

It appears a pressing concern with NSM is not the violence the group may commit, but violence it may provoke in counter-demonstrators. NSM declares itself opposed to violence and has been careful not to break laws. However, previous rallies which have resulted in violence, have provided the NSM with extensive national media coverage. It seems the NSM has grasped upon the concept of lawful protests, as a viable means to capture the national spotlight, especially given the potential for agitated and violent counter-protests. The NSM attempts to provide outrage, which may rile a crowd of opponents to commit a crime.

①-300A-SE-92275-18

Throughout the last 12 months NSM units have been organized in Seattle, the Tri-Cities and Mukilteo, Washington. During the last few months, [REDACTED] has organized rallies in Olympia, Seattle, Des Moines and Everett, Washington. The FBI has information indicating that the NSM Washington Unit to be relatively small in number. However, while the NSM membership remains small, previous NSM rallies have shown to produce hundreds of counter-protestors who attend the NSM rallies and combat relatively few NSM members.

Three Nazi Party Members Make Brief Appearance at Viking Fest

By BRYNN GRIMLEY
BRYNN.GRIMLEY@KITSAPSUN.COM

POULSBO

Tensions rose late Sunday afternoon in Poulsbo as three members of the National Socialist Movement made their way through the Viking Fest crowd.

Wearing tan shirts with red, white and black swastika armbands, the three men drew stares as they strolled down to the waterfront. They exchanged comments — some more friendly than others — with other festival visitors.

The members of America's Nazi party attended Viking Fest to support Poulsbo's Norwegian roots, said member Gary Namit. He was accompanied by two other Nazi party members, Justin Boyer and a man who declined to give his name. The men would not say where they came from, other than Washington. The business cards they handed out listed a Tacoma address.

Viking Fest organizers received several critical messages a few weeks ago, after participants on a white supremacist Web site learned this year's festival featured a Miss Viking Fest of black and Hispanic heritage. North Kitsap High School junior Jasmine Campbell, 17, won the crown during competition in late April.

Namit said he and his companions learned of the festival via the Internet.

"What brought us out here today was our concern for our European heritage," he said. "We believe, even though this might be a marketing gimmick, to use a girl who is not of European descent as a queen for a European heritage festival is offensive."

The members left after an hour and a half, asking Poulsbo police to escort them to their cars to assure their safety.

As the festival drew to a close Sunday, Campbell's classmates voiced opposition to the Nazi party's presence. "That they would even come to Poulsbo is ridiculous," said Sarah Kurley. "They were walking around giving (business) cards out to little kids trying to tell them to be like them."

In an attempt to prevent a confrontation, event organizers escorted Campbell and the court into an RV until the three men left the area, Viking Fest President Gary Jones said.

Mayor Kathryn Quade, who was not at the festival during the incident, received a call from Poulsbo Police Chief Jeff Doran, informing her the men were in attendance. Doran told her there were no problems.

"My main concern was for Jasmine and the other girls — I didn't want this to leave a sour taste in their mouths," Quade said. "But we had a wonderful weekend and the community really came out and rallied around each other."

Groups mobilize against neo-Nazis

By Venice Buhain

The Olympian

*from the Olympian
6/19/06*

OLYMPIA - After three encounters with neo-Nazis in Olympia, local groups are planning what to do when the National Socialist Movement, a group trying to establish itself in Western Washington, comes to town for a rally July 3.

□ Previous encounters with the neo-Nazi group, including its appearance Sunday at the Downtown Neighborhood Association Street Fair, have resulted in shouting matches with locals angered by the group's messages in favor of white separatism.

Some groups, such as the Olympia Movement for Justice and Peace, plan to protest the National Socialist Movement at the scene of its July rally.

But other groups are organizing a different type of response.

Nonconfrontational

Rather than setting up a confrontation on the steps of the Capitol, Unity in the Community is organizing a series of events to raise awareness and support for multiculturalism, including a diversity festival July 2. The community celebration in Sylvester Park downtown will include music, food and speakers who support diversity.

"We respect the breadth of responses," Unity in the Community co-chairwoman Reiko Callner said. "The neo-Nazis appeal to the worst parts of human nature. We want to have a life-affirming, positive response. That's been an important distinction from the get-go."

Unity in the Community events will include fundraisers for organizations that support diversity, screenings of documentaries, panel discussions on gender issues and poverty, workshops on nonviolence and a diversity fair.

If all of that sounds like normal fare for the Olympia area, Callner acknowledged that they are activities local groups already would support.

"One of the good things about the neo-Nazis coming here is that you get around to doing things that you mean to do because you believe in it," she said.

Unity in the Community also called on mainstream organizations and Thurston County residents who have not protested the neo-Nazis to sign on to a public pledge that they support diversity.

Among the organizations and people that have signed on to Unity in the Community are Lacey and Tumwater city councils of Lacey, Tumwater and Olympia, Gov. Chris Gregoire and a long list of county residents.

The list of people, which ran in advertisements donated by The Olympian, has hundreds of names, and some local groups were disappointed that they inadvertently were left out of the newspaper, said Anna Schlecht, a Unity in the Community organizer who is in charge of compiling the list.

"It was exciting to type in names I've never heard before," she said.

The group is trying to get its message to the public, taking a cue from a documentary called "Not In Our Town" about people's response to hate crimes in Billings, Mont., said Kathy Baros Friedt, Unity in the Community organizer and chairwoman of the state Human Rights Commission.

Unity in the Community is not a formal organization but a coalition of local groups, including volunteers from the state Human Rights Commission and people involved in synagogues and Parents, Families & Friends of Lesbians & Gays.

The group's goal is to bring into the open as many groups and people as possible who support diversity and oppose neo-Nazi ideas but might not want to protest the July rally.

Different responses

The National Socialist Movement rally is likely to attract many of the same people who protested the group the first two times, said Marco Rosaire Rossi of the Olympia Movement for Justice and Peace, or OMJP. That group also plans a peaceful vigil at the Capitol's Tivoli Fountain after the National Socialist Movement rally ends.

Some people plan to attend both protests, said Teresa Sykora Lovaas, a Unity in the Community volunteer. She said she understands why some would avoid the National Socialist Movement rally.

"There's a certain segment of the community who is not interested in any confrontation," she said.

Lacey Mayor Virgil Clarkson said the Unity in the Community response and park celebration are set up purposely for people to avoid confrontation.

"This is an opportunity to express our feelings," he said.

The July strategy is similar to April's, when Unity in the Community had a counter-rally at Heritage Park, away from the neo-Nazi rally planned for Sylvester Park so people could express their displeasure while avoiding heated confrontations.

As the Unity in the Community event was closing, however, participants found out that the National Socialist Movement members had gathered on the nearby steps of the Capitol, and much of the audience left Heritage Park to protest at the Capitol.

"I think, as with anything, there is a spectrum of responses," Rabbi Seth Goldstein said last week. "Some feel that the neo-Nazis need to be responded to and that their message needs to be countered. Some people feel the neo-Nazis want the attention and want the response, and that's their modus operandi, so we should ignore them."

David Lynn, who spent time with leaders in the National Socialist Movement to make a documentary film, recently videotaped an unannounced demonstration in Everett, which drew one protester - a woman who happened to drive by.

Lynn's video shows members of the National Socialist Movement, wearing swastika armbands and brown shirts, waving large flags and handing out fliers to several young white men, including one with a swastika drawn on his torso under his T-shirt.

"In the hour that we were there, three people walked up to us," Lynn said. "They were free to do what they want to do, which is recruit people. A counterdemonstration prevents them from doing that."

Get the message out

State leaders of the National Socialist Movement say it's only fair that their message against multiculturalism is heard, even though mainstream Thurston County groups have come out against the idea of "racialism," which is the idea that races should intermix as little as possible.

John Brandt, unit leader of the Snohomish County National Socialist Movement, said all members of the group have been lumped with its more "radical" members and that the group's basic message is not being heard.

"Part of it is propaganda and fear," Brandt said. "We talk about people who are traitors - sometimes we call them 'traitors to the race.' "

Brandt said some people affiliated with the National Socialist Movement are more "radical" than he in their message - for instance, the Web site nukeisrael.com, run by Oregon resident Jim Ramm, features a copy of a computer game in which a player can "Bust up the Jewish invaders,

- ----- and their mixed-raced mongrel allies with machine guns, grenades, rocket launchers, mini-guns & more!"

Brandt said that kind of invective serves to alienate those who might be sympathetic to the "racialist" message.

"I don't believe in dropping leaflets in neighborhoods. You don't get votes that way," Brandt said.

He said he respects Unity in the Community's right to express its opinion, but he hopes his group's message can be heard and that he can change some minds as well.

"A lot of your mainstream groups will denounce racism," Brandt said. "Sixty years ago, most mainstream groups would have denounced Martin Luther King Jr."

Callner said when National Socialist Movement members started coming to Olympia, several activists discussed ignoring the neo-Nazis in an effort to minimize their event. But she said media attention makes a counter-response necessary.

"We have to tolerate odious speech," Callner said. "But you respond to odious speech with more speech."

Times and Dates

The National Socialist Movement's "Patriots against White Genocide" Rally will be from 2 to 4 p.m. July 3 on the steps of the state Capitol building. As part of the weekend events, the group will have a campout at a location disclosed only to its members.

Events organized in response to the National Socialist Movement rally:

- July 2, noon to 4 p.m., Sylvester Park, Legion and Capitol ways, downtown Olympia. Unity in the Community event with music, speakers, children's activities and cultural performances to demonstrate support for diversity and equality.
- July 3, evening, Tivoli Fountain on Capitol Campus. Olympia Movement for Justice and Peace demonstration to counter the National Socialist Movement rally.

Ongoing

- The Lemonade Project:

People are pledging money for every hour that the neo-Nazis have a public presence in Olympia. The money will go to Stonewall Youth; Community Youth Services; Northwest Immigrants Rights Center; the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; and Temple Beth Hatfiloh. For more information, write to lemonade@olympiaunityinthecommunity.org.

Workshops and discussions

- Tuesday:

Unity in the Community will be part of a noon forum during the Tumwater Chamber of Commerce meeting at the Tumwater Comfort Inn & Conference Center, 1620 74th Ave. S.W., Tumwater.

- Tuesday:

Showing and discussion of the documentary film "Not in Our Town" at 7 p.m. at St. John's Episcopal Church, 114 20th Ave. S.E., Olympia.

- Thursday and June 29:

The Olympia Movement for Justice and Peace is having two panel discussions on "Gender and Sexuality" and "Poverty and Racism" at Traditions Cafe, 300 Fifth Ave. S.W. Both events are at 7 p.m.

- July 1:

The two Olympia Movement for Justice and Peace workshops at the Olympia Free School, 610 Columbia St., are free and open to the public. A workshop on anti-oppression begins at noon. A workshop on nonviolent communication begins at 5:30 p.m.

White power outage: Only 12 neo-Nazis show

CURT WOODWARD; The Associated Press

Published: July 4th, 2006 01:00 AM

Hundreds of demonstrators sang, danced and traded insults Monday with a small group of neo-Nazis who gathered on the Capitol steps in the third such rally this year in the liberal college town of Olympia.

Twelve members of the National Socialist Movement stood in a row outside the Capitol, wearing their signature brown shirts, red swastika armbands and black boots. They held aloft two swastika flags and railed against gays, Jews, nonwhites and communists over a public address system.

The group, which is based in Minneapolis and claims chapters around the country, said it hoped to draw attention and find new recruits with the rally.

"We're going to come with more storm troopers every year, and every month we're going to double in size," Seattle-area neo-Nazi Justin Boyer told the crowd.

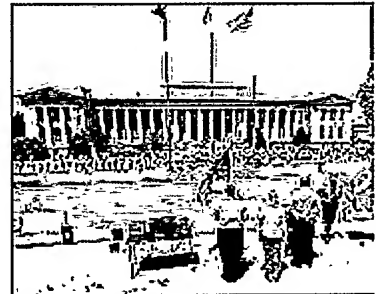

Similar National Socialist Movement demonstrations have turned violent elsewhere in the country, but the State Patrol reported no arrests or incidents during the rally and protests, which lasted about two hours.

"We're really proud of the community and the way they handled themselves," patrol Sgt. Monica Hunter said. "We couldn't have asked for any better than we got."

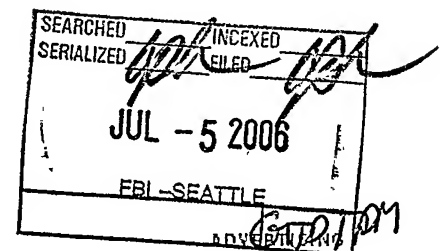

The larger group of anti-Nazi protesters was separated from the Capitol steps by a chain-link fence, heavy barricades and scores of police in riot gear spread out over a buffer of about 50 yards.

The State Patrol had about 275 troopers on hand for security, and authorities estimated the anti-Nazi crowd at more than 500 at its peak.

The protesters played drums, blew whistles, chanted and made their own speeches over another loudspeaker and bullhorns. At one point, they turned their backs on the neo-Nazis.

Among the protesters was Robert Guerrero, 42, of Tacoma, who wore a traditional Tlingit cedar headband and a cape decorated with the image of a raven as he beat an elk-hide drum. Guerrero said he was at the protest to represent indigenous people.

"These folks need to know that they are immigrants," he said, gesturing toward the neo-Nazis. "They want to get rid of immigrants? Well, go ahead."

Justin Wright, 37, of Tumwater, dressed in the polka-dot shirt, heart-shaped sunglasses and face paint he dons when performing as Jusby the Clown. He also brought his son, 2-year-old Orion, to the protest.

"Humor relaxes people," he said as a half-dozen other clowns marched in mock goose-steps, carrying signs that razzed the neo-Nazis. "I think showing nonsense is the sanest way to cope with it."

Experts say the National Socialist Movement, or NSM, has become the leading group of its kind in the country following the deaths and incarcerations of other top white supremacists and neo-Nazis.

Approximately 12 NSM members rallied on the steps of the Legislative Building on State Capitol Campus on July 3, 2006. Investigators estimate an additional 12 NSM members, or supports, were present at the NSM camp out which began on July 2, 2006. The NSM members camped for several days at the Salmon Shores Resort, Black Lake, Olympia, Washington. The additional members, and or supports, did not rally at the Capitol Campus.

Approximately 250 uniformed officers from the WSP and other local agencies were on duty and provided support during the rally. Many of these officers acted as a "man wall" between the NSM and counter-protestors. Approximately 30 individuals from WSP, the FBI and other agencies assisted with observation and command post duties. The WSP also deployed approximately 50 Civil Disobedience Action Team (CDAT) officers who provided riot and violence support.

Approximately 400 counter-protestors attended the NSM rally. Counter-protestors included groups such as Unity in the Community and the Olympia Movement for Justice and Peace (OMJP). Counter-protestors utilized flyers and held rallies before and on July 3, 2006, to recruit and sponsor their cause.

On the day of the rally, the NSM were instructed by the WSP to assemble at an undisclosed Park-N-Ride parking lot where they were to be searched by the WSP for weapons. The NSM members car pooled from the camp out location to the Park-N-Ride. No weapons were found. The WSP then bused the NSM members to the Capitol Campus to participate in the rally. WSP maintained a secure perimeter on NSM vehicles during the rally.

The WSP divided the NSM from counter-protestors by erecting a six foot high reinforced chainlink fence which surrounded the Legislative Building steps. Approximately 50 yards from the chainlink fence, the WSP erected a yellow police tape and instructed individuals to remain outside the area between the chainlink fence and yellow tape. The WSP then positioned officers inside the yellow tape to form a "man wall."

Perimeter security was maintained by the WSP as streets leading to the Capitol Campus were closed. WSP CDAT members were staged inside and near the Legislative Building for riot control. A command post for the event was established at a nearby location with the WSP acting as the lead agency. The command post had

Although some counter-protesters appeared confrontational, no injuries were reported during the rally and no individuals were arrested. The NSM were bused back to the Park-N-Ride from the Capitol Campus, safely secured by a WSP perimeter to avoid counter-protestor violence.

As the rally drew closer, information, including source intelligence, was shared accordingly with the WSP Intelligence Unit. Websites, blogs, postings and announcements were analyzed for intelligence value leading toward the rally. The WSP and other agencies spent numerous hours gathering flyers and handouts from local venues and festivals leading toward the rally.

Extensive coordination was done between the WSP and other agencies regarding individuals who were arrested at similar rallies throughout Washington prior to the captioned rally. Investigators believed these individuals would likely attend the NSM rally. This analysis included tactics used by counter-protestors and NSM members against police and civilians.

In an effort to control potentially violent confrontations between the NSM and counter-protestor groups, the WSP and other agencies meet with community leaders and known activists for discussion prior to the rally.

Based upon the violence which took place at the NSM rallies held in Toledo, Ohio; Orlando, Florida; and Lansing, Michigan; the WSP and other agencies obtained Operation Plans and solicited input from these applicable law enforcement and state agencies. Based upon the aforementioned, it was apparent that arrests and violence could be greatly diminished based on the number of uniformed officers, riot officers, crowd control, and fencing utilized during the rally. Additionally, intelligence gathered prior to the event also greatly diminished potential violence and arrests.

On June 29, 2006, an operational planning meeting for the NSM rally was held at a WSP office. This planning meeting included personnel from the WSP, FBI and other local, state and federal agencies. Operation plans were discussed and assignments were made by the WSP for coordinated support during the rally.

Investigators believe the tactics of fencing and adequate uniformed officer presence were key to averting violence. De-confliction between all of the law enforcement agencies was generally smooth. All of the agencies involved were able to come together and the operational plan created by the WSP was well executed. The operational plans can be requested directly from the WSP and WSP Intelligence Unit.
